

Sexual Violence Against American Indians & Alaska Natives

Maryland is home to three state-recognized Indigenous tribes: Piscataway Indian Nation; the Piscataway Conoy Tribe; and the Accohannock Indian Tribe. In 2020, American Indian and Native Alaskan individuals made up 0.5% of Maryland's population.¹

American Indian and Alaska Native populations are twice as likely to experience rape or sexual assault, compared to all other races.² Despite the high rates of physical and sexual violence perpetrated against this community, there is a lack of awareness and action to protect these survivors. American Indians and Alaska Natives are very unlikely to report sexual violence because of limited resources and general mistrust in the police.³

Statistics

The indigenous population includes 6.8 million people who make up hundreds of different communities.⁴

- 41% of sexual assaults against American Indians are committed by a stranger, 34% are committed by an acquaintance, and 25% are committed by an intimate partner or family member.⁵
- 96% of Native survivors experience the violence from non-native perpetrators.⁶
- On average, 5,900 sexual assaults per year are committed against American Indians ages 12 and older.⁷
- 4 out of 5 American Indian and Alaska Native women have experienced violence and 1 in 2 have experienced sexual violence.⁸
- Native American and Alaska Native women are more than 2.5x more likely to be raped or sexually assaulted than other women in the U.S.⁹

Two-Spirit Individuals

Being two-spirit means having both the male and female spirit within the individual. In many tribes, being two-spirit is considered a third gender, and in other tribes being a two-spirit female is considered its own distinct gender.¹⁰

- 85% of two-spirit women and 45% of two-spirit men have been sexually assaulted, which is significantly greater than the general American Indian population.¹¹
